Black Police Feel Pressure in Pretoria

Situation More Precarious Than Ever For Full 40% of South Africa's Officers

By Alan Cowell New York Times Service

JOHANNESBURG - The yellow police van came to a stop across the dirt road in one of South Africa's black townships, and an officer bearing a rifle tumbled out to block the path of the sedan advancing toward him. To the rear, a second police car cut off retreat. The sedan's occupants were trapped. Elsewhere, at the border with the independent, black-ruled country of Lesotho, a South African officer searched the private car entering the country and found documents that he believed to be subversive, so the driver was summoned for questioning by a man who identified himself as a member of the security police. The papers were seized.

The images might be familiar to those who keep up with the twists of South Africa's racial confrontation. But there was, in both episodes, a difference from the stereotype of white police officers crushing black dissent. In both cases the officers were black, and their quarry were whites suspected of violating South African laws.

By official estimates, about 40 percent of the 45,000 people in the South African police are black. And of late, their position among their fellow blacks seems more precarious than ever.

Black officers were among the policemen who opened fire on a funeral procession of 4,000 people on March 21 in Langa, a black township of the southern city of Uitenhage, killing at least 19

Last year, as unrest spread in South Africa's myriad black townships, black activists sought to draw distinctions that offered various categories of opprobrium to the police. There were, said Patrick Lekota, spokesman of the United Democratic Front, blacks recruited as township policemen to protect black community councilors, and they were viewed as quislings, since the councils are seen by many blacks as fromts for continued white influence.
In contrast, he said, there were black members of the South African police, who, except for officers who had gained personal notoriety for attacking fellow blacks, were looked upon as men just doing a job, albeit in the pay of white mas-

Their white commanders put it the other way around. "We are terribly impressed by the loyalty of these people." Major Steve van Rooyen, a police spokesman in Pretoria said of the black officers.

The black officers are caught up in a fight by activists directed not at the whites - too powerful and too far out of reach — but against those blacks seen as their surrogates, easy targets in black townships where there are few hiding places from Colonel Leon Mellett, a spokesman for the Ministry of Law and Order, which is supposed to control the police, said there was no shortage of recruits for the police, since the force is seen by some blacks as providing steady and secure work.

Chance of Failure Worst for 'Family Farmers' in U.S.

DES MOINES, Iowa — Here is Peter Brent's story of failure on the land: "I shouldn't have bought the farm. I wasn't a land speculator, and I feel I did a good job. But I've got nothing to show for 45 years except my good health, a good wife

There appears to be no easy way out in the next several years for the farmers deepest in debt, even if there should be increased government aid, improved prices or dra-matically lower interest rates. How did this situation come

Debt, after all, has been a way of life for farmers: They borrowed to buy land and to pay yearly operating and living costs. And if all went as hoped, crops were good enough to let the farmers pay off their notes and start again.

I said I had to do more, I said I would get even the next year. But the hole kept getting deeper. Then land prices began to fall, and

In a sense, the U.S. farmer had become a cog in an international food-production machine. He took on debt to provide food to Russians and Japanese, to buy machines made by workers in Moline and Chicago, and to pay for chemi-cals made in Midland, Texas, and St. Louis. His borrowing brought profit to his banker.

Then the bubble burst. The Federal Reserve Board and the Reagan administration acted to slow infla-tion. Land and machinery values peaked in 1981, and then began a slide that has not stopped. As recession took hold and farm prices stagnated, the federal budget deficit kept interest rates high.

Farmers were faced with reductions in income and equity while the cost of servicing their debt re-

U.S. Reports A Positive Reply By Gorbachev On Summit Talk

By Lou Cannon and David Hoffman

WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan has disclosed in an interview that the new Soviet leader has responded to his invitation for a Washington summit meeting. Administration officials described the written reply as positive.

President Reagan extended the summit invitation last month in a letter sent with Vice President George Bush to the funeral in Moscow of Mr. Gorbachev's predecessor, Konstantin U. Chernenko.

In the interview, Mr. Reagan reiterated his hopes for holding the meeting despite the killing March 24 of Major Arthur D. Nicholson Jr. of the U.S. Army by a Soviet gnard in East Germany.

"This was a murder, a cold-blooded murder," President Reagan said, "and it reflects on the difference between the two societies, one that has no regard for human life and one like our own that thinks it's the most important

"And, yes, I want a meeting even more so, to sit down and look someone in the eye and talk to him about what we could do to make sure nothing of this kind happens

The official who confirmed the positive nature of Mr. Gorbachev's reply said that the killing of Major Nicholson had clouded arrangements for a summit meeting and that a more detailed Soviet reply about such a meeting was expected In the 32-minute interview, President Reagan also contended that disaffection among Nicaraguans with the leftist Sandinist government was increasing. He again blamed "rival factions" among blacks in South Africa for much of the recent violence there. Mr. Reagan said negotiations in Geneva to reduce nuclear weapons

JERUSALEM — The Israeli Army transferred more than 1,000 Lebanese prisoners, mostly Shiite Moslem opponents, to a detention facility inside Israel on Tuesday in preparation for the closing of its controversial Ansar prison camp in southern Lebanon on Wednesday.

The army announced that several hundred other prisoners who remained in Ansar, 12 miles (19 kilo-meters) north of Israel's border, will be released on Wednesday as a gesture of good will toward the residents of southern Lebanon. The plan to dismantle the Ansar prison camp, which Israel estab-lished shortly after its June 1982 invasion of Lebanon, indicated that the Israelis are nearing the execution of the second stage in their planned three-stage withdrawal from Lebanon. An Israeli military communiqué

KHARTOUM, Sudan ruling Sudanese Socialist Union turned out thousands of supporters Tuesday to cheer for President Gaafar Nimeiri on the eve of a strike and demonstration planned by major professional unions to drive him from office.

Vice President Al-Rashid al-Tahir Bakr read greetings to the crowd from President Nimeiri, currently on a trip to Washington where he met Monday with President Ronald Reagan. President Nimeiri's cable said. The fact that these elements turned to violence proves ... their attempts have failed utterly. The government blamed the fundamentalist Moslem Brotherhood, radical Arab Baathists and communists for three days of rioting last week that followed student-led demonstrations against recent increases in commodity prices.

On Tuesday, doctors in Omdurman and Khartoum North, which with Khartonm constitute the capital region, joined their Khartour colleagues in refusing to work.

Striking doctors said only the Khartoum General Hospital emergency ward remained open "for the sake of the people." Despite the arrests, and government threats of more, organizers said they still planned to expand the strike on Wednesday to involve lawyers, judges, university profes-sors, engineers and other professionals. Their declared aim is the -removal of President Nimeiri. Reporters estimated about 3,000 people attended the pro-government rally in Khartoum's main Martyrs Square. Soldiers joined police to keep the peace, but the rally passed without incident. Bomb Injures Magistrate in Sicily

TRAPANI, Sicily (Reuters) — Carlo Palermo, a magistrate who has investigated arms and drugs smuggling operations and the Sicilian Mafia, was injured Tuesday by a bomb that killed a woman and her two sons, Anthorities immediately ordered road blocks around the city of Trapani, on the western Sicilian coast, and called a meeting presided by the overnment's special commissioner against the Malia.

The bomb, which police said was probably placed in a box on a pavement or under a car and activated by remote control, exploded as two bulletproof cars carrying Mr. Palermo and his police escort passed by. Mr. Palermo, 37, was slightly injured but two members of his police escort were more seriously hurt and hospitalized in serious condition.

Thyssen Information

The Thyssen Group had a good start to the new fiscal year of 1984/85. Last year's areas of growth and profitability have mostly been maintained, while stragglers have been able to catch up. Thyssen's external sales worldwide rose by 6% during the first half of the fiscal year. All divisions are in the black. The Group's result for the first half of this year is considerably better than that recorded for the same period last year. At the recent annual stockholders' meeting, a resumption of dividend payments for the current fiscal year was announced.

The steel division has maintained its production at last year's level. Prices could be gradually increased during the past few months, but raw materials costs have also increased considerably due to the strong dollar. Sales rose by 11 % during the first half of this year. Thyssen steel is again expecting a positive result for 1984/85.

In the specialty steel division, all production plants are at present working with normal capacity utilization or even better. So far, sales have risen by 8%. Significant increases in the prices of purchased alloying metals. quoted in dollars, are having to be absorbed. All in all, Thyssen's specialty steel division is again expecting a positive result for 1984/85.

The capital goods and manufactured products division increased its sales by a total of 7% during the first half of the current fiscal year. At Thyssen Industrie, incoming orders increased strongly. This and the product mix changes of the past few years are improving the company's profitability. Thyssen Industrie is expecting a positive result for 1984/85. At Budd, most of the company's plants continue to work at full capacity. Budd will be achieving a significantly positive result. The railway passenger car operations in the U.S. are now being run by Transit America Inc. Provisions were made in last year's annual financial statements to cover burdens caused by the completion of loss-incurring orders booked in previous years. At Rheinische Kalksteinwerke, the positive trend in results is being maintained.

The trading and services division has been strongly expanding its international business for some years. During the first half of this fiscal year, sales rose by 6%. The profit situation is stable, and this division will also close the current fiscal year with a profit.

Total sales of the divisions

Thyssen Group

Thyssen also expects its nonconsolidated holdings to again contribute positively to the annual result.

Acid Rain Debate May Move Westward

last spring when Congress split along regional lines — the Northeast, with its sensitive lakes, versus the Middle West, with its coal-burning power plants. This year's debate promises to be different. The New York Times reports: Re-cent studies have shown the Rocky Mountains to be threatened with the same devastation that has poisoned Appalachian Mountain ecosystems.

Acid rain, which has been blamed for the disappearance of fish and the destruction of some plant life, arises from oxides of sulphur and nitrogen emitted by factories, power plants and automobiles. Copper smelters are the source of wo-thirds of the sulphur oxides in the West, and the pollution could worsen. Dozens of new power plants and synthetic fuel plants are being planned.

The number of condors in the wild has dropped to 11 this year from 15 last year. There are 16 condors in captivity; the hope is that eventually there will be enough to repopulate the California canyons.

"Huckleberry Finn" was controversial even in Mark Twain's lifetime, as Michael Patrick Hearn, author of "The Annotated Huckleberry Finn," notes in a letter to The New York Times. He says that when the Omaha Public Library banned Twain's book in 1902, the author wrote The Omaha World Herald to say:

"I am fearfully afraid that this noise is doing much harm. It has started a number of hitherto spotless people to reading 'Huck Finn' out of natural human curiosity to learn what this is all about — people who had not heard of him before; people whose morals will go to wreck and rain now.

Panel Votes Fewer MXs

Than Sought By Reagan

By Bill Keller New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - A Senate Armed Services subcommittee has voted to approve production of another 21 MX missiles next year, rejecting President Ronald Reagan's request for 48, according to congressional sources.

The vote Monday night by the Republican-controlled subcommittee on strategic and theater nuclear forces was the first assault on the president's missile-building program after his series of victories in Congress during the last two weeks.

Voting 7-4 in a closed session, the subcommittee turned back a proposal by Senator Sam Nunn, Democrat of Georgia, to cut the program more deeply in the 1986 fiscal year, producing only 12 inter-continental missiles and slashing the planned size of the MX missile force to 40 from 100.

Congress has already approved production of 42 missiles, including 21 to be produced this year; they were freed last week in a narrow series of votes.

The sources said that the Senate subcommittee resisted proposals to make major cuts in the president's missile defense research program, the strategic defense initiative popularly known as "star wars."

The panel voted to cut the Pentagon's $3.7-billion request for the program by between $150 million and $750 million, depending on the ultimate size of the military budget.

The Armed Services subcommittees, in an unorthodox exercise, have been drafting three versions of a military budget.

One would allow no increases over the current budget except to adjust for inflation, which is the level favored by the Senate Budget

The others would allow 3 percent or 4 percent in addition. The subcommittee's MX vote, however, applied to all three ver-sions of its bill. In all, the administration pro-poses to build 223 MX missiles,

In Reagan Bastion, a Liberal Step on Pay

Washington Post Service

COLORADO SPRINGS — Can a conservative, heavily Republican nonunion city government find happiness with a bold new policy championed mainly by organized labor and feminists?

"You're darn right we're happy with comparable worth," says Robert Isaac, a loyal Reagan supporter who is mayor of this thriving city of 250,000 at the foot of Pike's Peak.

"Some of my Republican friends back in Washington have been pretty tough on this idea," says Mr. Isaac, immediate past president of the Republican Mayors' Confer-ence, "But I tell them, if they'd try it, they'd like it."

Some government officials and business leaders in Washington have had harsh words for comparable worth - the idea that women working in jobs traditionally filled by women should get the same pay as men in different jobs that require comparable skill and respon-

A former White House economic adviser, William A. Niskanen Jr., has called comparable worth "a truly crazy proposal." Clarence M. Pendleton Jr., head of the U.S. Crvil Rights Commission, said the con-cept was "the looniest idea since

"Yeah, I heard that," Mr. Isaac said with a shake of the head. "We wouldn't call it loony here in Colorado Springs.

"But what we had before, where a secretary is doing a job that's just as hard and just as important as a truck mechanic, and she's getting worth hit this conservative city four years ago. Thirty-six City Hall secretaries, all women, went before the City Council to complain that city scheduled to get a higher raise than

"I was sitting at that meeting and boom! — there was the issue." said Richard Zickefoose, the city's personnel director. "We didn't expect it to come up, but all of a sudden we were faced with compa-

Mr. Zickefoose knew that the federal Equal Pay Act required equal pay for the same work, regardless of the worker's sex. But the law does not apply to workers do-ing different jobs, comparable or

rable worth."

As the second-largest employer in town after the federal government, which has military installations here, the city government was under minimal competitive pressure to take on the problem, and there was no public employees' union to force the issue.

But as Mr. Zickefoose and Mr. Isaac looked into the secretaries' complaint, they came to agree that was a result of years of discrimination against women workers. We felt we had no right to take advantage of it." That settled, Colorado Springs faced the problem that many critics of comparable worth consider to be insoluble: figuring out which jobs done mainly by women are compa-rable to different jobs done mainly by men. "The question is, is a secretary's job the same as a tire repairman's?" Mr. Zickefoose said. "Is a payroll clerk comparable to a tree trim-mer? And, sure, that's a tough question.

Colorado Springs drew its answers from the Hay Guide-Chart Profile, devised by Hay & Associates, a Philadelphia consulting firm. It assigns points to each job in four areas: the knowledge and skills required to do the job, the ingenuity required, the degree of supervision required and working conditions

This scale gave, for example, 208 points each to the jobs performed by a secretarial supervisor and a probation counselor. In 1980, however, the probation job, traditionally filled by men, paid $1,709 a month, while the supervisor, a woman, received $1,389, or 23 per-

New York Times Service WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration has decided to drop a proposal by the Central Intelli-gence Agency to make it a crime for government employees to disclose national security secrets without authorization, officials said. They said, however, that the administration has not ruled out proposing similar legislation in the future.

The officials said the CIA joined in a "consensus" decision last week not to proceed with a proposal by William J. Casey, the director of central intelligence, to send the provision to Congress as part of the proposed Intelligence Authoriza-tion Act for the 1986 fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1.

The proposal would have penalized government employees and others who have "authorized access" to classified information for deliberately disclosing secrets that reasonably could be expected to damage the national security" to anyone not authorized to receive the information.

Taiwan, Nicaragua: Unusual Couple Relations Survive Differences in Politics and Allies cial, relations with about 50 other nations and that

By Jim Mann Los Angeles Times Service

TAIPEI - Taiwan and Nicaragua may qualify as one of the oddest couples in the community of

The Taiwan-based Nationalist Chinese, who are exiles from the mainland because of the Chinese Communist victory 35 years ago, are fervent capitalists and dependent on close, if unofficial, ties to the United States. The Sandinists in Nicaragua are Marxists and hardly fond of Washington.

Despite such deep differences, Nicaragua's leftist government continues to recognize Taiwan rather than the Communist administration in Beijing, as the legitimate government of China. And Taiwan is carefully keeping up its diplomatic ties, trade and loan agreements with Nicaragua.

"Our presence there prevents the Communist Chinese from getting in," Chang Ching-yu, direc-tor of Taiwan's government information office, said recently, "Otherwise, you would have a much greater Marxist influence inside Nicaragua." Its relations with the Sandinists illustrate the complexities and anomalies in Taiwan's foreign policy as it seeks to preserve its continuing claim as the legitimate government of all China. Only 26 countries have diplomatic relations with these ties have improved in recent years. Through nongovernment agencies such as the American Institute in Taiwan, many of the world's major countries maintain missions here to handle commerce and other matters with Taiwan, which now ranks 13th in international trade. Still, these ties are unofficial. Taiwan is going to great lengths to keep up all the formal diplomatic

Taiwan, the largest being South Korea, Saudi Ara-bia and South Africa. The United States severed official relations in 1979 in favor of beginning relations with Beijing.

"It is our policy to maintain relations with all non-Communist countries," said Mr. Chang, the information official.

Taiwan has also been courting small island-countries in the Caribbean and the South Pacific in its struggle for international recognition. In the last three years, Taipei has established ties with St. Lucia, St. Christopher and Nevis, and Dominica
— all in the Caribbean.

Taiwan's most intense efforts to preserve diplo-matic recognition have been in Central America, the one region of the world where it has successfully maintained a solid core of diplomatic support. Not only Nicaragua, but El Salvador, Guater Honduras, Costa Rica and Panama recognize the government in Taipei as the government of all

Officials of mainland China and Nicaragua reportedly talked last year about improving their relations, but no change resulted from the meeting. A U.S. State Department official expressed the view that the relationship between the Chinese Nationalists and Nicaragna "is an anomaly, and it

WASHINGTON — A Bulgarian government program aimed at obliterating the special identity of the Turkish minority has led to reports of numerous deaths among the population, State Department offi-cials say. Bulgarian security agents are also reported to have been

The assistant secretary of state for human rights, Elliott Abrams, on Monday called it a "gunpoint program." The public statement was the first by the U.S. govern-ment, although the United States has brought up the matter privately with Bulgarian officials. Bulgaria has denied the allegations.

Mr. Abrams's statement came as the Turkish prime minister, Turgut Ozal, arrived here Monday on an official visit.

Reports of the Bulgarian campaign have prompted large street demonstrations among Turks in Istanbul and have brought at least two official protests to Bulgaria from the Turkish government.

It relies essentially on nucleartipped anti-missiles to protect its command posts and the siles of its intercontinental ballistic missiles.

The U.S. Strategic Defense Ininative is exploring nonnuclear systems. Scientists hope computers can provide accurate tracking and targeting, enabling them to uchury agile or fast-moving targets without ting, enabling them to destroy a nuclear explosion.

The United States is hoping its surge can overtake what the Soviet Union has accomplished over two decades, U.S. officials say.

The Soviets never abandoned their substantial research into strategic defenses, as the United States did 10 years ago," the project chief, Lieutenant General James A. Abrahamson, says and "in some areas, they may be ahead of us."

Military researchers have adopt-ed some Soviet technology in the U.S. program, particularly particlebeam generators. This technologi-cal pilitering, however, has become more difficult since Soviet scientists have stopped publishing re-search in this field.

A pivotal point in this emerging system is the controversial new Siberian radar. An Excuse Not to Help

More trouble is brewing for international population programs in the U.S. Congress. This time it is sparked by concern about coercive practices reportedly used in China to promote one-child families. That is a serious concern, and one which we share, but it should not be a pretext to deny wanted family planning help to millions of people in developing countries where coercion is not an issue at all.

The Reagan administration has already severely disrupted many family planning programs by refusing to award the $17 million earmarked in this year's budget for the International Planned Parenthood Federation. The federation would not agree to stop performing abortion-related services requested by other countries. The funds were cut off despite the expressed disapproval of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, despite the fact that the IPPF, like all other U.S. grantees, is careful not to use U.S. money for any abortion-related activities, and despite the fact that the activi-ties that the administration is punishing are perfectly legal under American law and the law of the foreign countries involved.

Citing accounts that the Chinese government is tolerating if not promoting infanticide and coerced abortions, the Reagan administration has also held up funds for UN population programs, part of which support certain pro-grams — but not abortion — in China. Because the United States is a major contributor to the UN programs, dozens of poor countries face a disastrous loss of family planning assistance unless the funds are released promptly.

Efforts to restore funding to the IPPF and other affected groups are under way in Congress, where committees are marking up this year's foreign aid authorization. However, some members and outside groups are fighting any effort to limit the administration's discretion to withhold funding. Some of these groups object to funding for any type of contraception except so-called "natural" methods. But a potentially broader source of opposition comes from members who worry that a vote for continuing U.S. population aid might somehow be taken as condoning such practices as infanticide and forced abortions.

Feelings about abortion — and especially about involuntary abortion or infanticide understandably run high. But no one is talking about condoning, least of all sponsoring, co-ercive programs in China or anywhere else. What is being proposed is to continue, and preferably to expand, humane efforts to allow some of the poorest people in the world to make the identical family planning choice that almost every family in the United States takes for granted: to have the number of children it feels it can best care for.

Plus Spain and Portugal

Forget about olives, wine, fruit and fish, those perennial staples of Europe's family quarrels. It will be a bigger, freer family next year when Spain and Portugal become the 11th and 12th members of the European Community. The good news is that more of Western Europe will be freely welded to common political values than at any time since Charlemagne. Assuming that the 12 national parliaments assent, the Community's territory will grow by a third and its population will jump from 280 million to 325 million. On paper that will make it the West's largest market.

But mainly on paper. The Common Market was founded in 1957 in the fervent hope that it would free Europe's brains and capital from the old inhibiting frontiers, but that has not happened. Tariffs have been cut but free trade is energetically thwarted by farm subsidies, state-promoted cartels and protectionist red tape. Transit delays alone, at the borders that were to have disappeared, squander billions every year. Innovation is stifled by every nationality's "preferential" procurement policy.

The dream of genuine integration died long ago. At France's insistence in 1965, unanimity was required on issues of "vital interest" to any the end of the 1970s, the scramble for national advantage only became more intense. Along the way, the powers of the European Parlia-ment were hobbled. Every year seems to bring new external barriers to Japanese cars or Brazilian coffee. In ever larger amounts, the EC countries dump surplus foods and undermine poorer competitors in Asia and the Americas.

With the admission of Greece in 1979 the French-led farm bloc grew in size and influence. That is why negotiating the entry of Spain and Portugal took six years, held up among other things by Greece's demand for a multibillion-dollar "Mediterranean package" in compensatory aid. The final agreement provides $4.4 billion for Greece, France and Italy.

Still, the betrayal of the Common Market dream and the sordid haggling do not diminish the political significance of Spain and Portugal becoming full members of Western Europe. Neither was eligible until it completed its democratic revolution, a process that was begun by right-of-center regimes and completed by So-cialists. They are joining a flawed association, but their entry ratifies a historic passage. -THE NEW YORK TIMES.

A New Hand for Duarte

The altogether admirable effect of Sunday's legislative and municipal elections in El Salvador was to put into place, in a country wracked by war and economic rain, the full forms of democracy. From these elections two developments were worth hoping for. One was the strengthening of President José Napoleon Duarte's Christian Democrats. This happened. The party now clearly has its first legislative majority. The coalition led by Roberto d'Aubuisson, a man linked to unspeakable political atrocities, lost its former edge.

The second development worth hoping for was a result that gave the Salvadoran right enough reason to stay engaged in the political process but not so much as to let it keep frustrating President Duarte's major initiatives. Something like this may have happened. How Mr. Duarte plays his new hand will tell.

In El Salvador the way is never clear, but certainly Mr. Duarte has a fresh opportunity to press the dialogue with the left that has been frozen since December. The recent success of daylong national truces called for child immunization campaigns of the Pan American Health Organization and UNICEF indicates the hunger for peace that is there.

Mr. Duarte is in a position to assert more authority over the armed forces in order to further diminish the activity of the death squads and give himself more political latitude all around. He is a familiar - some would say a worn - figure. No one expects miracles from him, but he is a man of proven decency and courage. His frustrations in, for instance, redressing human rights violations and making reforms work do not come for want of trying.

His party apparently got none of the U.S.
help in the elections this year that was bestowed in the presidential election last year. This has produced suggestions in some quar-ters that the United States is cooling to him. It does not look that way to us. The help his party received last time tarnished him. He is much the stronger for winning on his own. Before, he was a good bet for the United States, and now he is a better bet.

An Alternative to Nimeiri?

For years now Sudan has been sinking into chaos. The hopeful plateau of the mid-1970s has been left far behind. President Nimeiri, who came to power by a military coup in 1969, has never brought himself to establish anything like a genuine democracy or to share power with any other political leader enjoying genuine mass support. He has presided over an increasingly corrupt and inefficient administration, and his economic policies - often illconceived and invariably ill-executed - have combined with climatic disasters to produce widespread famine and, in many parts of the who spread that it is and order.

Mr. Nimerri has for long been an embarrassing yet seemingly indispensable ally of the West faced with Colonel Qadhafi and the Soviet influence in Ethiopia. If the coalition of "antis" that Mr. Nimeiri has succeeded in creating could prove ready to become a coalition of positive support for a program of desperately needed reforms, that would be no less in the interest of the West than of the suffering Sudanese people themselves. Opportunity is there, but not yet the proof.

There are still two of this class of employees provided for at $720 a year. The Senate has refused to pass an appropriation for a professional masseur. rearmament, France will rely for her security on her own military measures and on "military accords" with other nations equally interested in the preservation of peace, Premier Pierre-Etienne Flandin declared in a speech in the Chamber of Deputies [on April 2]. This declaration, which defines France's policy in the present international crisis as a return to the pre-war system of military alliances, was made in the course of a review of the measures being taken to ensure the security of the country in any emergency. As a means of defending the currency, M. Flandin announced that the minting of gold coins would be resumed intensely, in order that gold may be again put in circulation with the least possible delay.

Misused Words, Muddled Minds and Flawed Policy

WASHINGTON — Now that the Reagan administration has embarked on a global war against "terrorism," it becomes increasingly im-portant to know what the war is against.

But instead of getting more precise, definitions are getting sloppier. My own imprecision was brought forcefully to my attention by readers of a recent line in this space (March 20) in which I said that Shiite "terrorists" were killing Israeli occu-piers of southern Lebanon. By phone and by mail I was reminded that, unlike past PLO shelling of Israeli villages in Galilee, the Shiites are attacking the soldiers of an illegal occupying force.

The Israelis, one day after letting it be known that they were speeding up their withdrawal, embarked on raids on four villages north of the occupation line, killing 23 people, two of them CBS newsmen, and at least some of them civilians. So it went. The fact that the Shiite forces are not in uniform, I was told, does not make them different from the French resistance maquis in World War II or the early militia of America's own revolution.

The military activities among residents of south Lebanon against Israeli military forces correspond to classic tactics of guerrilla warfare against an occupation force in one's own country," said one reader, who went on: "Guerrilla tactics dictate that because of the superior firepower and numerical advantages held by the occupying army, military resistance must not take the form of a head-on confrontation." Another asked: "If the Shiites were killing Soviets in Afghanistan, you would call them 'freedom fighters' — so why the By Philip Geyelin double standard where Israelis are involved?" This was quite enough to encourage a search of definitions and case histories. Webster's starts out making it simple: "Terrorizing" means "to terrify": A speeding truck driver meets that test. Websier went further: The "act of terrorizing" means "use of force or threats to demoralize, intimidate and subjugate [and especially] such use as a political weapon or policy." The battleship New Jersey standing off the Lebanese coast, even before it began shelling the Chuf mountains, meets that test. So does the CIA's mining of Nicaraguan persons of the blowing or Nicaraguan persons of the blowing of Nicaraguan persons of the blowing of Nicaraguan persons of the blowing of the latter than the blow of t ports or its blowing up of Nicaraguan refineries.

How about support of counter-revolutionary forces engaged, according to a flood of reliable reports, in atrocities of one sort or another involving civilians in the Nicaraguan countryside? Washington says the rebels are doing the same sort of things in El Salvador. It calls it "terrorism" in El dor, while the Nicaraguan "contras" are called "freedom fighters." And the reader is right, up to a point, in his Lebanon-Afghanistan analogy. The techniques of resistance are the same: If "terrorism" lits one, it fits the other.

I am perfectly aware of the distinction between techniques and purposes, and of differences in political objectives and/or ideological causes. From the standpoint of U.S. interests and policy, there are good guys and bad guys, Communists and anti-Communists, noble and ignoble aims.

Realpolitik, by these tests, requires a certain moral myopia. But when a responsible Israeli official in Washington lumps PLO attacks aimed exclusively at innocents with the Arab oil embargo as "terrorism," and when Israeli authorities talk about reprisal raids against suspected Shiite hideouts in Lebanese villages as an "offensive defense" military operation, words begin to lose all meaning and myopia begins to get in the way of Realpolitik.

Robert Kupperman, a Georgetown University

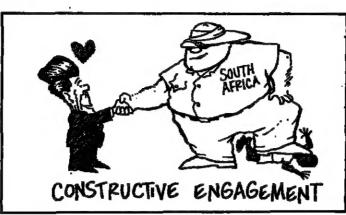

authority on terrorism, concedes that there is no all-purpose definition beyond "the use or threatened use of violence in the name of a political or ideological cause." So terrorism can be an extreme and repugnant expression of a legitimate grievance (the demands of stateless Palestinians being the most pressing case) for which the aggrieved, rightly or wrongly, see no alternative recourse.

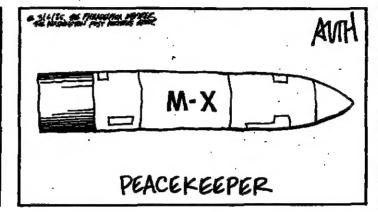

That is not an argument for respecting the PLO as a responsible negotiating partner. It is weak, scattered, incapable of making reliable decisions and composed of elements that are irremediably violence-prone. Not wishing to confront the underlying Palestinian grievance, the Israelis conveniently label the PLO a "terrorist organization."

Thus does this trigger word "terrorist" muddle clearheaded acceptance of the PLO as something to reckon with — "an important actor with a degree of political reality," in Mr. Kupperman's reset. Thus acceptance and devided words. Thus, as well, do imprecision and double standards confound diplomacy as the safe way out of the Arab-Israeli impasse.

Misleading Graphics Don't Serve a Fateful Debate

LONDON — Now that "star wars" and Strategic Defense Initiative are household words, television has had to come to grips with the project. Naturally it set out to do what it does best: tell the story in pictures.

But there are no pictures of devices that do not exist, that are only a gleam in a scientist's eye. So, to make an extraordinarily abstruse subject easy enough to grasp, well-briefed artists were summoned to produce d graphics. There lies th

The assumption is encouraged by President Reagan, who has made anti-missile defense efforts a top priority of his second term. A v tific and strategic question mark is being turned into a political litmus test: Are you a Reaganaut or not?
But television's job is not to pro-fruition until some time in the 21st century. Even if the scientific prob-lems can be solved and the devices engineered, defenses could never be tested in hostile conditions. Like the rest of nuclear strategy, missile defense is a matter of abstract equations about what could happen, so as to offer some assurance that it will not. Apparently Mr. Reagan has a vision that after hurtling America in this direction now he will be remem-

Still. they have not found a way to present the controversy so as to include the many doubts as vividly as the prom-ises. It probably could be done. Scientists experienced in weapon design have imagined likely countermeasures against "star wars." Graphics could be based on their ideas as well, showing the vulnerabilities. Strategists have begun to figure out many ways that might be used to overwhelm or escape defenses. sage, because of the hidden assumptions about reality on the screen. Perhaps the networks should take polls of the public's perceptions to find out to what extent people realize that the graphics represent only theories.

It is true that images are compelling. That imposes an obligation to make the distinction clear between visions, possibilities and facts.

ry. Feeling secure in his Justice-CIA protection, the macho police chief came to California to file a libel suit and hold a news conference: that was just a bit thick, and the criminal division in Washington sent word to per-mit the indicament, since the intelligence source was blown anyhow.

Mr. Nassar Haro was arraigned and bail was set at $250,000. A messenger soon arrived with the cash in a suitcase. The Mexican skipped bail and is a fugitive, with Mexico not about to aid in his capture. It turns out, however, that Mr.

Nassar Haro's police force was also deeply involved in the narcotics trade. When the Mexican army raided a huge drug warehouse in Chihua-hua, the guards arrested were from the Directorate of Federal Security.

The anger of drug bosses at this and other intrusions into their business probably led to the recent murder of an investigator for the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration. Now that Washington is pressuring Mexico to clean up its law en-forcement, the questions arise: Was the U.S. government wise to block the indictment of a suspected highlevel crook in the first place? Since he was likely to flee after he was finally was nicely to face after he was many indicted, why was no major effort made to deny bail? Why was the Justice Department's main concern the truthful U.S. prosecutor rather than the suspected lawbreaker?

The CIA tells me the story has been misreported. It says it exerted absolutely no pressure on the Justice Department to protect Mr. Nassar Haro and merely responded properly to a legitimate query from the crimi-nal division. Mark Richard, an old pro at the division, confirms the CIA account and explains that the indictment was originally blocked because the department wanted to be sure pose national secrets — would be used in the defense. To make that determination, delays were required.

That is possible; others say that visits by Ernest Mayersfeld, then deputy general counsel of the CIA, to Rudolph Guiliano, then associate attorney general, took the heat off the valuable suspect and later, as part of the no-leaks hysteria, turned it on the prosecutor. I do not know enough to judge where the truth lies.

I do know this: If you lie down with dogs, you get up with fleas. No realist can deny that sometimes it may be necessary, in the national interest, to do intelligence business with thieves and thugs, but more often than not such "equities" (formerly "assets") turn out to be liabilities. In light of the increased drug traf-fic across the Rio Grande, and with U.S. enforcement officials incensed Television needs to become more aware of the implications of its mesboth U.S. lawmen and their spooks surely wish they had decided to press for the indictment of the corrupt cop, even if his capture was unlikely. Don Regan: A Loner Who Elicits Fear and Respect in Washington

By Myra MacPherson Washington Post Service

ASHINGTON — It is a long way from the Cambridge of Don Regan's childhood to the Oval Office, where the new White House chief of staff sees the president of the United States daily. A long way from the apartment where Mr. Regan lived with his family to his spacious home overlooking the Potomac River in Mount Vernon. A long way from working his way through Harvard — as a "day hop" who lived at home — to the multimil-lionaire he became before leaving Merrill Lynch to become secretary of the Treasury in 1981. A long way from his Democratic roots to becoming the consummate cheerleader of all things

Reagan.
Who Donald Thomas Regan is — and how and why he made those leaps - is not easy to learn, particularly from Mr. Regan himself, Sitting in a sunlit room, looking past the wintercovered swimming pool to the river, Mr. Regan, the son of a railroad security guard, shunted aside questions about his past, saying half-jok-ingly, half-testily, "What are you? wary, guarded, appraising as he listens.
When Mr. Regan is asked what has driven him to the top, to become the powerful No. 2 man in the White House, he said flatly. "I am not introspective." His explanation is that, "I was always very competitive. I don't know why. It was built into me." Even in something as frivolous as charades, he has been known to get furious at team players who don't go for the win. Was this competitiveness something his mother or father instilled? A refreshingly candid woman, Ann Regan sees part of her role in a world of fawning subordinates as "always knocking Don down a peg." Now she said with a half-jab, "He always knows more than the fella around him. Right? Don Regan: "Well, you're saying it, not L"

Mr. Regan's rise from post-World War II trainee to head of Merrill Lynch & Co., Wall Street's largest brokerage firm, was not without controversy. He enjoys the money he made; estimates range from $30 to $40 million. Mr. Regan's standard answer is that he does not know how much, since it is in a blind trust. But he also savors his reputation as a maverick who brokerage industry.

Sitting in his White House office with the fireplace crackling, Mr. Regan smiled, recalling and profits can be increased, as well as tax those days, "Do you know why I'm hated?" he asked with relish. "I broke up their cozy little supply-siders by proposing a tax-reform plan club. Wall Street was a cartel. They proclaimed capitalism but practiced car-telism. control of Merrill in the late 1960s, investment banking was dominated by an old-boy network in entrenched old-line houses, in many ways the world found in John P. Marquand novels. Then, Chris Welles wrote in Institutional Investor in 1981, "in a display of financial muscle perhaps not seen on lower Manhattan since the 1920s,

Mr. Regan eclipsed most of his competitors." In the 1970s he pushed hard to, in effect, deregulate the stock market industry. A competitor receiled, "Before, if you were interested, say, in buying 100 shares of General Motors on the New York Stock Exchange, there was a fixed fee. Then it all changed, you could charge anything you wanted. It brought about discount brokers, bare-bones terms, no research, advice, nothing. And a lot of small firms went under."

Another competitor, Walter Wriston, former chairman of Citicorp, said, "I have nothing but admiration for Don. Innovators have enemies who are interested in the status quo. Did a lot of firms go under [when fixed fees ended]? Yes. Was somebody hurt? Sure. When you move from regulated to unregulated you have to get out and scratch."

former White House insider said. "The boy, bring my bags' kind of approach." Most of those who at high above Wall Street in airy offices thinking about money have one thing in common with most of political Washington. Fearful of his power, they will not speak of Mr. Regam for attribution. All their stories about him speak of his temper and ego. A competitor said, "Regan had a very good sense of the jugular. Anyone who raised his head too high got it shot off." Mr. Regan agrees. "I chewed up a lot of people," he once said. "Either they couldn't stand the heat, or I couldn't stand their performance."

A Merrill executive who calls Mr. Regan a friend said, nonetheless, that "if you argued the blank off the team. He has a wild temper and can get very angry." Would he shout, explode, his face turn red? "All of the above." But the Merrill man added what others have said at the Treasury Department, that Mr. Regan also instilled loyalty. He was a strong leader, very articulate. You were never left in any doubt about what he wanted to do or wanted you to

When asked about his vaunted temper, Mr. Regan tried for a joke. "You mean old lovable me?" His wife interrupted. "You might as well admit it. You have an impossible temper! The only thing to do when you get mad is leave the house and go for a long afternoon walk."

Quite another image of Mr. Regan emerged in Washington. He is widely regarded as a man who subordinated himself to the president to the extreme of being a toady. He was ridiculed for his ardent cheerleading, especially the pre-mature prediction that the economy was roaring

He seemed to be eclipsed first by the budget director, David A. Stockman, and then by the White House chief of staff, James A. Baker 3d, who did much of the negotiating on tax mea-sures on the Hill. But longtime Regan-watchers insist that he did indeed have a game plan; purposely lying low until Mr. Stockman shot himself in the foot with his Atlantic Monthly interviews, lying low until the supply-siders gued that the "proposal has been on the shelf for trusted him. However, some who attended White House meetings say otherwise. "What troubled me about Don," said one, "was that he never said inside what he believed. He was usually giving the good news or going in for some Fed [Federal Reserve Board] bashing."

NE celebrated story is that Mr. Regan was pushing for military spending cuts but as soon as the president showed up, with him in a meeting it simply was not tolerat-ed. Once he made his decision that was it. he instantly backtracked "Yeah, I saw that Anyone who continued to argue could just get same story," Mr. Regan commented. The only man Mr. Regan has to please is Many early colleagues say now that Mr. Rean had a "private agenda" and a game plan for more than satisfied with his own performance. He also takes pains to suggest that he is not a yes-man, that he has already explained a thing or two to President Reagan. Questioned about reports that the president seemed unreceptive to Mr. Regan's proposed corporate tax changes. Mr. Regan sighed. "As I told him, 'On this corporate tax you were lured into answering by the reporter who said, Well what do you think about raising corporate taxes $14 billion?"

Mr. Regan goes on to say that he gave the president the benefit of his wisdom after the stories appeared: "What that means is that we're reducing the corporate rate from 46 to 33 [percent]. And guess who ends up paying taxes? The corporations that don't pay now. So it's not all corporations. And then he said, 'Oh. Now I see!' He really hadn't had time to read it all, to scope it out around the table."

ANY ardent supply-siders cannot un-derstand why Mr. Regan now sup-ports a tax simplification program that has been praised by liberals and moderates. The former assistant secretary of the Treasury, Paul Craig Roberts, who said Mr. Regan "stood up to the last four years," he said. "I think he was just too busy to watch the tax policy and it was just pulled out."

Mr. Regan emphatically said, "No, no. Craig doesn't want to believe I would do such a thing. But this is deliberate. I knew we were going to have opposition. No one likes to have their taxes still have the same amount without having a bill was not going to be the smasning success that [Representative Jack] Kemp and Company broadened base. Take anything. Take a pile of sand and squish it and it flattens out — and that is what is called a flat tax. I think when people witheringly. made a living in a world of tax straddles and shelters, Mr. Regan smiled and said, "Get peotake a definite point of view and will argue, bonefully successfully for that point of view."

Just about everyone in official Washington, including most in the press corps, has at least one Ego Wall: pictures of himself with anyone famous. In Mr. Regan's sprawling home, there is one large room devoted to these icons of succase. He proudly points out the many pictures of himself with the president: "There we are, playing golf at the Amenbergs. There I am giving the president a golf lesson."

There are pictures of them laughing together in obvious rapport. "Dear Don," begins the inscription on a picture of the president whispering in Mr. Regan's ear, "Tell 'em what I said or they'll think I'm asking for a tax break. Warm regards, Ron." And the most recent inscription, "Now Don, Let's see, is it see, no, it must be chief? Whichever, I like it. Warmest Regards

The room means a lot to Don Regan. There So did he argue with the president for cuts in the military budget? "Yeah." He is asked about the view, shared by many Republicans on the plaques from Merrill Lynch, a bone-china plate Boone is wandering around late at night in Beverly Hills because he is worried. He has to introduce President Reagan, then the new govemor of California, and doesn't know whether to pronounce it Ray-gan or Ree-gan. Mr. Regan laughed and pointed, finally, with pride to his framed diploma from Harvard Townies often went to college, but usually not Harvard. Mr. Regan, the son of a railroad security guard, is one of those who made the leap, attending Harvard on scholarship. John F. Kennedy was a classmate; in their senior year, 1940. Mr. Regan switched to the Republican Party. Conservatism was alive at Harvard in 1940 That year, 619 out of a graduating class of about 950 answered a questionnaire; a large plurality thought New Deal programs should be cur-

Recently, Mr. Regan sat in his White House office and talked about his views of 45 years ago. "My answer had to be at that time that I didn't like it. The first time I voted was in 1940 and I voted for Willkie. I did not vote for a Roosevelt." Wendell Willkie himself was considered a progressive. He said, "What choice did

Many Boston Irish find Mr. Regan's Republicanism suspect. Said Jim Shannon, the former Massachusetts congressman, "What kind of rankles me — and I think probably the speaker

Mr. Regan retains a residual Boston twang.

but he is silent about his childhood to the point of being standoffish. Longtime business acquaintances are struck that he never mentions his pre-Harvard life, and in interviews he brushes aside most questions about those early the years. There are no easy anecdotes, only clipped

Mr. Regan's grandparents came from Ireland. in those insular days when Boston Yankees posted such signs as "No Irish Need Apply." Don's grandfather delivered Standard Oil in a horse-drawn wagon; before long he owned three houses. There was always a family push to excel, OME Boston Irish, even those younger than Mr. Regan, were instilled with a sense of settling the score against the Yankees. Not Mr. Regan, he said. "Growing up, I never gave anything of that nature a thought and I never talked to my father about it." There s a story that William Regan was fired for refusing to substitute for Boston police during the historic 1919 strike.

The hardships of the strike made a lasting impression on others younger than Mr. Regan, who seems mostly embarrassed when asked if the story of his father is true. "Oh. I guess so." Remember, that happened when I was just a baby. I remember it as part of folklore growing. up. But kids never go into that detail about their. father's past."

Mr. Regan went from parochial junior high to Cambridge High and Latin. Mr. Regan, who describes himself as fiercely competitive, played no sports: "When I was the age where most kids, are in sports I was working," he said.

At Harvard, while men of wealth like John F.. Kennedy were joining the Crimson and Hasty-Pudding Club, Mr. Regan was a "day hop," living at home, keeping up a scholarship and-working his way through school. Extracurricular activities were sparse. He joined Phillips, Brooks house, a philanthropic organization, and was vice president his senior year of St. Paul's Catholic Club. Few from his high school and college days remember Don Regan, who left home and never looked back.

In many ways, the year he graduated, 1940, was the beginning for Donald Thomas Regan. In 1940 he became a Republican, and he joined the Marines. He saw action in four campaigns' during World War II, including Guadalcanal and Okinawa, Mr. Regan has said often that the experience "changed my entire life."

"At age 26 I was a major on Okinawa with 1,200 men under me," he said. "When people are calling you the 'old man' and you're 26 years old and you're responsible for so many people, it does shape your life. You're not afraid of command from then on."

Does combat make the battles of the corporate board room and Washington seem slight?

"Let's put it this way," he said. "It conditions you for it. Having gone through combat, you're

Most Crowded Course on Campus: The Vietnam War

By Paul Dean Los Angeles Times Service

S ANTA BARBARA, California — Vietnam veterans are fighting unfinished wars on a campus here.

"When I was your age," a former GI ex-plained to a class, "I watched while my best friend's head was blown off." He recounted how he took to hard drugs liquor, "you name it; you try anything to forget."

When they buried the Unknown Soldier I had the tube on and started crying for three hours and couldn't stop," he said.

The students were stunned. They were hearing about the unknown war. Vietnam, they agreed, was stifled by condemnation while they were growing up, and largely ignored by their high schools. They knew little of the horrors and despair that was being revealed to their class. Some students had tears in their eyes. They stood and applauded. They crowded the stage, standing six deep around the Vietnam veterans. Later a veteran discussed this sympathetic reception from the students. Suppose such pub-lic acceptance had been offered when he came home 17 years ago?

"It would have helped," he said. "Oh, yes, it would have helped so much." The students said it was a living education, as vital as hearing Abraham Lincoln lecture on emancipation. This was history hot to the touch, offering a chance to see its participants, to understand them, to assess and to challenge. At the Santa Barbara campus of the University of California, students have enrolled by the hundreds this quarter to study the Vietnam War that former students once died in, dodged or demonstrated against. More than 900 of the 15,000 undergraduates have enrolled, which makes the course more popular than any other on campus, including human sexuality.

Covent Garden's 'Barber' Is Just Where It Belongs

By Henry Pleasants ONDON - "Figaro qua, Fi-L garo là, Figaro su, Figaro giù," as Rossini s barber sings in his famous "Largo al factotum" on his entrance in "Il Barbiere di Sivig-lia." Figaro here, Figaro there, Figaro up and down and everywhere. So it has seemed hereabouts in the past couple of weeks. A Scottish Opera production in Glasgow puts "The Barber of Seville" in the 1950s, with Figaro sporting an El-vis Presley hairdo and a zoot suit. That production, by David Mac-Donald, also favors its audiences, according to a colleague, with por-table radios and plastic carryalls and a chain-smoking, beer-drink-

The Kent Opera, at the Marlowe Theater in Canterbury, in a production by Jonathan Hales, has placed the opera in a late Victorian English village, with Figaro a check-trousered, bowler-crowned sport in a setting complete with Gilbertian marines and bobbies. One critic described it as "an amalgam of Beaumarchais and 'The Pickwick Papers."

There are no similar manifestations of the produceritis epidemic at Covent Garden, where a new production by Cologne's Michael Hampe puts "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" right back where it belongs, in 18th-century Seville. It is conducted as it should be conducted - in the relatively new Zedda edition by Gabriele Ferro in an anspicious Covent Garden debut, with the Royal Opera Orchestra in its most sparkling virtuoso form. The casting favors the lower voices - Thomas Allen in the title role (which he has recently recorded), Samuel Ramey as Don Basilio and the veteran Italian buffo Enzo Dara as a superlative Dr. Bartolo. Rosina is sung by the Argentine mezzo, Alicia Nafé, and Almaviva by the young South African tenor, Deon van der Walt. Both sing valiantly and accurately, if with not quite the panache of their lowervoiced colleagues. It's a delightful production, marred from time to time by excessive busyness and by excessive mugging on the part of Ramey's gloriously sung Basilio. Further performances of the Royal Opera's "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" are on April 4, 8 and 11.

The annual Borough of Camden Festival has offered its traditional exercises in operatic archaeology. most notably Giulio Caccini's "Emidice," dating from 1602, and the first opera to be printed. It was presented in concert form in the British Museum's Nereid Gallery, providing an appropriate setting of Greek temple and friezes.

Caccini's preface to "Le Nuove Musiche" spells out in detail what the Florentine founders of opera had in mind, and this production seemed, in prospect, a welcome oping what he preached. In the event, a conscientious performance by the New London Consort pursued authenticity to the point — for those who have read Caccini — of unauthentic chastity and foundered on the work's manifest inferiority melodic, harmonic and dramatic to Monteverdi's "Orfeo," which came along five years later.

About the other exhumations Boito's "Nerone," Richard Strauss's "Friedenstag" and Mozart's juvenile "La Finta Semplice," the verdict is that, despite excellent performances - Boito and Stranss in concert form - some forgotten operas are best forgotten.

Henry Pleasants has written about opera for many years and is the author of several books on music.

In London now you can see Michael Crawford doing it with "Barnam." It is not that "Barnum" is all that great a musical. But it is the kind of show that a star with enough energy and single-minded dedication to the theatrical craft can make into a memorable extension of the self.

What is now at the Victoria Palace is not Cy Coleman's "Barnum," or Joe Layton's "Barmum," or Peter Coe's "Barmm"; it no longer belongs to a composer or a producer or a director. It is Crawford's "Barnum," and he is everywhere: up on the high wire, down by the orchestra pit, stage center and left and right and aloft, hanging from the ropes or sliding a hundred feet. Austrian Exhibit Poster down them from the upper gallery.
He is at once acting and singing and dancing and juggling and stage managing and urging on his somewhat ragged troupe like a manic Olympic coach set on nothing less than the gold. Ever since it opened on Broad-way in 1980 with Jim Dale, "Barnum" has suffered from a deep uncertainty about whether it is supposed to be a musical circus or a DOONESBURY musical about a circus. The career of Phineas Taylor Barnum was an intriguing one and had as much to do-with American Senate politics and the Swedish opera singer Jenny Lind as with the Big Top.

But in trying to cram all that into a musical something always went wrong, and Mark Bramble's book has always been a hybrid affair. Crawford and his producer, Harold Fielding, seem, however, to have realized that, with circuses folding their tents all over, we need to be reminded of the small of the sawdust. So what we get at the Victoria Palace may well be a little tacky and a little undercast and still a little rough around the edges but even so it represents the true spirit of circus, and that is what we are in moderately active trading.

NYSE Lower on Higher Volume

The Dow Jones industrial average, which gained 5.97 Monday, was down 7.07 to 1,264.90 at the NYSE close. Declines led advances by an 8-7 ratio among the 1.994 issues crossing the NYSE tape at 4 P.M. EST.

Big Board volume rose to 102.2 million from 89.9 million traded Monday. Prices were lower in active trading of Ameri-

an Stock Exchange issues. "It would appear — even in today's soft market — that the consolidation is drawing to a close," said Joseph Broder of Stuart, Coleman. He said the market may approach the 1,300 level by the end of the month.

Harry Villec of Sutro & Co., Palo Alto, California, also is predicting a return to the 1,300 level, possibly before the end of April.

Before seeing 1,300, though, he said a short-term drop to the 1,240-1,250 level was possible.

One reason the market will gain, he said, is pessimism. "A lot of people are saying it isn't going to happen."

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

International Agencies Lure Few From the Private Sector

By SHERRY BUCHANAN onal Herald Tribune

ARIS - Profit-oriented executives don't become dogooders overnight. According to the World Bank, the Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development and the General Agreements on Tariff and Trade, few senior general managers make mid-career moves from the corporate world to the world of international civil service. The most notable exception is the World Bank president, A.W.

Clausen, previously the president and chief executive of Bank of America. World Bank presidents are not recruited by the World Bank, but are appointed by the U.S. government.
Of 19 vice presidents at the World Bank — the most senior officials reporting directly to the president's office — only one came from a private com-pany, Rio Tinto-Zinc Corp. The others were recruited from within the bank, from national civil services or from the outside," said Anthony P. Williams, director of personnel management at the World Bank, Mr. Williams recently joined the bank from a private consultancy company. "For line managers it is important to know the organization, because they have to supervise people," he added.

According to GATT, OECD and the World Bank, some senior managers interested in moving to the public sector may not have the right skills; some may not find the money or titles they are accustomed to; some may perceive limited opportunity for career advancement, and some simply don't believe in the effectiveness

The best fit between the corporate world and the World Bank is in the project finance business. "We recruit most of our specialists, like power engineers, forestry experts, biologists and chemists, from the corporate sector," said Mr. Williams of the World Bank. "But we don't recruit them as managers."

Like private multinationals, the World Bank is in the business of raising money in the international capital markets. As a result, it draws some members of its financial teams from commercial and investment banks.

But there has been no conscious effort among the organizations to step up recruitment efforts from the corporate sector.

The organizations' tax-free salaries are sometimes lower than those paid by U.S. multinationals for senior interna-

World Bank salaries for professional staff range from $26,980 to $95,330. More than 90 percent of the World Bank's professional staff is based in Washington. "At higher levels, World Bank salaries tend to be lower than those in the U.S. corporate sector," said Tim Cullen, chief of external relations for Europe. Mr. Cullen himself is a convert. He joined the World Bank after working for Ford Motor Co. and Continental Illinois Corp.

Some executives who do move from the corporate world to the World Bank get frustrated by the bureaucratic approach. "Research projects tend to be much longer and don't feed directly into decision-making," said a recent World Bank convert.

Others find bureaucratic procedures a plus. In a private company, you are controlled by many individuals. Some people may not like you. In the World Bank the system controls you. There are more safeguards in that altuntion, and Yves Gazzo, who is in charge of procurement for the World Bank in Europe. Before joining the World Bank, Mr. Gazzo was an auditor with Arthur Anderson & Co., where he was involved in restructuring

Dresdner '84 Profit Slips 1%

Strong 2d Half Aids Earnings

By Warren Getler

International Herald Tribune
FRANKFURT — Dresdner Bank AG, West Germany's second largest commercial bank, said Tuesday that 1984 group-operating profit was off 1 percent from 1983's record result, but exceeded 2 biliion Deutsche marks (about $641 million) on the strength of excellent trading performance.

In keeping with general practice mong West German banks, no specific figure for operating profit

Wolfgang Roeller, Dresdner's chairman, said a rapid expansion of volume in the second half gave a strong boost to group operating profit. The figure is the sum of net nterest income, commission fees and gains from trading on its own account less running costs and extracedinary items.

Mr. Roeller said volume for the year surged 8.7 percent, to 179 billion DM. The increase helped offset a shrinkage in interest margin - the difference between interest earned and interest paid - to 2.7 percent from 2.9 percent a year earlier, Mr. Roeller said. The margin is likely to continue to narrow this year, he added.

Parent bank partial operating profit, which excludes trading on the bank's own account, fell 5.9 percent, to 795 million DM, Mr. Roeller said.

Dresdner said its declared group net profit for 1984 fell to 375.9 on DM from 382.9 million DM the year earlier. The bank said it had set aside 210 million DM of 1984 results to strengthen reserves. One industry analyst in Frankfort noted that with a 14.3-billion

DM surge in business volume, Dresdner Bank's 1984 operating performance does not appear especially strong.

Dresdner's shares rose 10 plen-nigs, to 189 DM, on the Frankfurt Stock Exchange on Tuesday. The bank had previously nounced that it was raising its 1984 Monday to acquire all shares out-dividend to 7.50 DM from 6 DM, standing of the forest-products

Mr. Roeller emphasized that risk provisions for foreign loans in 1984 were considerably higher than the previous year. He also noted that with debt-repayment uncertainties still at issue in Latin America and (Continued on Page 13, Col. 3)

Brazil's Exports Take a Perilous Dip

By Alan Riding New York Times Service RIO DE JANEIRO - Selling commuter planes to the United States, oil rigs to the Soviet Union and myriad other products to all points in between, Brazil's exporters last year be-came the toast of the International Monetary Fund and the foreign banking community.

The exporters demonstrated that the country's worst economic crisis in decades could be overcome with salable products and hard work. Brazil was held up as a model to other Latin American

The achievement was impressive. A record $13.1-billion trade surplus fueled a 4.4-percent growth rate last year - the first expansion of Brazil's economy since 1980 — and supplied the dollars necessary to meet interest payments on the country's $102billion foreign debt.

But Brazil's trade picture has suddenly turned cloudy. The country is seeing a dip in its sales and orders abroad. The lifeline to recovery no longer seems so

The implications are potentially grave. A slump in the trade surplus this year could affect not only Brazil's domestic growth, inflation and exchange rates, but also its relations with the IMF and foreign creditors, especially if it is unable to keep up interest payments without new borrow-

In Brazil's case, the reversal of three-year trend of rising exports has coincided with the March 15 inauguration of the country's first civilian administration in 21 years. Adding to the uncertainty that normally accompanies changes of govern-ment, the President-elect, Tancredo Neves, has been unable 10

But there is no silencing the whispers of concern. During Jan-uary and February, exports were $314 million lower and the trade surplus $260 million less than during the corresponding two months last year —and dramatically below the trade figures for the final months of 1984. "In the most optimistic of cases, the trade surplus will reach $9 billion this year," according to Lacrte Setubal, president of the Association of Brazilian Exporters. Officials are still hoping for a trade surplus of $11 billion to $12 billion, but some economists see a surplus closer to $6

Mr. Neves has declared his twin objectives to be greater eco-nomic development and a simul-taneous reduction of inflation. But both stand in the way of the easiest trade options: A big trade surplus could be preserved by further controlling imports, but this would discourage growth. New Senate Bill Raises Pressure On Japan Trade

WASHINGTON - The Senate ports of similar U.S. products. Finance Committee approved Tuesday a bill giving President Ronald Reagan 90 days to negotiate increased access for U.S. prodnets in Japan or to take action to reduce imports from Japan.

The House Ways and Means Committee, meanwhile, sent to the full House a nonbinding resolution similar to one approved 92-0 last week by the Senate, urging the president to restrict imports from Japan unless it opens its markets.

The moves came as Japan's latest offers in high-level trade negotia-tions were being assessed in Washington amid some confusion over whether they included anything

The Finance Committee measure, approved in a 12-4 vote, is much stronger than the nonbinding House resolution. In effect, it would require the president to im-prove the U.S. trade deficit with Japan by $3.5 billion during the next 12 months. If he could not do so by increasing U.S. exports to Japan he would have to do so by limiting imports from Japan through quotas, tariffs or other

The committee calculates that Japan's decision to relax its controls on auto exports to the United States will result in $4.5 billion in increased Japanese sales to the United States, and that in recent years, U.S. exports to Japan have risen by an average of about $1 billion. The $3.5 billion figure in the bill represents the difference.

The committee defeated a measure to halt imports of Japanese telecommunications goods unless domestic market to U.S. products.

Meanwhile, a White House spokesman said that Mr. Reagan had "great faith" in Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone's promises to push for concessions.

Larry Speakes, the deputy White House press secretary, said that two American envoys who met with Mr. Nakasone last weekend were convinced that Japan would move to open its markets.

Gaston Sigur, a Japan expert on the National Security Council, and Lionel H. Olmer, the undersecretary of commerce for international trade, reported to Mr. Reagan on Monday on their talks in Tokyo. "There were positive signs" at their meeting with Mr. Nakasone, said Mr. Speakes.

Robins Sets Up Dalkon Reserve

RICHMOND, Virginia A.H. Robins Co., which faces hundreds of lawsuits claiming injuries from its Dalkon Shield birth control device, said Tuesday it had set aside a $615million reserve to cover claims.

The reserve, charged against 1984 earnings, resulted in a loss of $461.6 million. Operating earnings for the year rose 21 percent from a year earlier, to $128 million, while sales rose 12 percent, to $631.8 million.

As of last Dec. 31, about 3,800 claims were pending against the company in federal and state courts in the United States. The company had disposed by that date of about 8,300 claims, paying out $314.6 million. Since Jan. 1, about 900 suits have been filed. The com-pany sold about 2.9 million of the devices from 1971 to 1974.

The two sides had come close to agreement on rescheduling $45.3 billion of commercial debt coming due be-tween 1985 and 1991, with Brazil pointing out that its record 1984 trade surplus eliminated the need for "new money" this year.

In the short term, Brazil could tap its reserves to cover the gap between its trade surplus and the $12 billion or so required to meet interest payments this year. Further, it could discourage imports in areas where "import-substitution" by local producers is still possible.

A right lid on imports has been a key element in keeping the trade surplus high. Imports fell last year by $1.5 billion, to $13.9 billion (af-ter a record $22.9 billion in 1980). But the real thrust of the trade surplus has come from exports, which jumped from $21.9 billion in 1983 to $27 billion in 1984. Brazil's exporters have proved to

THE BUCK STARTS HERE.

The Chicago Mercantile Exchange, the world's most successful futures and options market, announces yet another way to manage business risk more effectively-Options on Eurodollar Futures.

The CME's underlying futures contract in Eurodollars, introduced on its International Monetary Market (IMM) in 1981, quickly became the most active short-term interest rate contract offered by any exchange. In fact, current trading volume has averaged more than 40,000 contracts per day, representing an underlying value of $40 billion.

Now that Eurodollar futures and options are trading side-by-side, liquidity in both markets will be enhanced and, in addition, their comparative values can be assessed.

Leading banks, institutions and government dealers can now also use Eurodollar options as an integral part of their interest rate dealing operations. Options enable them to provide attractive and innovative services to their customers, resulting in increased fee income opportunities.

Corporate treasurers can use Eurodollar options as "insurance policies" against future interest rate fluctuations in their borrowing and investment needs. Additionally, they can employ these options to enhance investment yields or reduce borrowing costs.

Eurodollar options, in becoming a part of the CME's already-impressive range of interest rate products, now give bankers, dealers and corporations even greater flexibility in managing rate uncertainty.

Sheraton Chief International Herald Tribune Named by ITT

The Associated Press NEW YORK - John Kapioltas was named chairman and chief executive of Sheraton Corp., succeeding Howard P. James, the hotel company's parent, ITT Corp., has announced.
ITT said Monday that Mr.
Kapioltas retains his titles of president and chief operating officer of Sheraton, which is based in Boston. Mr. Kapioltas, who joined Sheraton in 1960, was named president in 1983. Previously, he was a senior vice president of Sheraton Corp. and president of Sheraton Management Corp., the company's British-based division for Europe, Africa, the Middle East and South Asia.

stay in Bangkok, where he was di-rector and general manager of Mer-cantile Bank Ltd., which was acquired in May 1984 by Citibank. He succeeds Tatsuo Kubota, who will be based in New York in Cinbank's Individual Bank Group, the consumer banking division. Metal Box PLC, a British metal, paper and plastics packaging group, has named Brian Smith its chairman. He is currently a director of Imperial Chemical Industries, where he has worked for more than 30 years. Mr. Smith will move to Metal Box in July to succeed Denis

Unemployment In West Germany Declined in March

FRANKFURT -- Unemployment in West Germany, unadjusted for seasonal factors, declined to 2.47 million in March, or 10 percent of the work force, from 2.61 million in February, when the unemployment rate had been at a near-record 10.5 percent, the Fed-eral Labor Office in Nuremberg said Tuesday. When seasonal factors were taken into account, unemployment in March climbed to 2.32 million from 2.30 million in February, the Labor Office reported. Improving weather conditions were cited as the reason for the decline in the unadjusted figure. A year earlier, unadjusted unemployment in March was 2,39 million, or 9.6 percent of the work force. Separately, the economic minis-try in Bonn reported Tuesday that seasonally adjusted industrial production eased 0.6 percent in February, after a revised 1.8-percent drop in January.

The ministry said severe winter weather was to blame for the 2percent decline in combined January-February production as against November-December 1984.

THE FIFTH SON

By Elie Wiesel. Translated from the French by Marion Wiesel. 220 pp. $15.95. Summit Books, 1230 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N. Y. 10020.

Reviewed by Richard F. Shepard THE story that Elie Wiesel tells in his latest novel, "The Fifth Son," would seem to be about the generation of Holocaust survivors' children, the offspring of his own tortured generation, the one that left the extermination generation, the one that left the externination camps with no belongings other than the intolerably burdensome luggage of remembrance. It would seem to be about this new generation, born into a different world, but it is not altogether so. There are two main currents running through this novel by one who has come to be a most-heard voice of the Holocaust, a voice that is humanistic and universal even as it is Jewishminded and special. There is the story of the Brooklyn-born young man of the 1960s, whose father, onetime head of the Jewish Council in a German-run ghetto in Poland, shrouds his life in silence and whose mother has gone mad and lives on in an institution.

There is also the searching, philosophical question of revenge. Is it ever justified? When may one kill an oppressor, and what are the reasons that permit it? These matters constitule the cement that ties the generations to-gether, that are the axis on which the story revolves. The young man learns that the German villain still lives, as a prosperous industri-alist under another name. It had been thought that his father had killed this man after the war, but the assassination had been botched.

The German had not only uprooted the Jews, but he had also brutally killed the young man's infant brother in the ghetto. The father, filled with guilt at having killed despite the admonitions of a rabbi he admired, spends his time endlessly reviewing the morality of killing with a fellow survivor. Wiesel is essentially a poet, or at least as much of a poet that any fine writer who deals with such mighty themes must be. The poetry is preserved in Marion Wiesel's translation. It is, in the Wiesel style, writing that is not intent on name-brand detail, in the fashion of the documentary novelist, but writing that seeks to capture in one passage after another the sensi-tivities and the moods that are the realities of our lives. The realities he writes about are rooted in the Nazi past but extend to New York, to Israel, to drugs, to the entire world. "Most people think that shadows follow, precede or surround beings or objects. The truth is that they also surround words, ideac, desires, deeds, impulses and memories," a character, a man who deals in shadows, says. And it is shadows that Wiesel is himself dealing with here, the shadows cast by an unhappy past and that threaten to darken, by our own thoughts, our very future. A shadow is not a shadow, he is saying: it is as real as the flesh that shapes it.

How well he represents the feeling of children born to Holocaust survivors, only those children themselves can say; and, as with any thing in life, one suspects there are as many reactions as there are people. But the author does make all of us "children" of that generation, all of us who were not there, in the sense that he outlines for us the burdens of guilt, of revenge, of despair, and passes on to us his own deas on how he balances those burdens while leaving us to decide how to deal with them in our own minds.

Take Me Over, Jesse!

By Russell Baker EW YORK - Milldewey, our Wall Street man who covers hostile takeovers, tells me I am

"It's all over the Street that You are about to be hostilely taken

About to be taken over hostilely," I said.

Call it pointless sentimentality, but I don't want the end of my life's work to be announced in a split infinitive. For that matter, maybe the great capitalist who yearns to take me over doesn't want standards lowered either.

"True," said Milldewey, "they usually don't like to completely debase the product until they put in their own management." To debase the product completely." I said. That's the name of the game, all right," he said.

I still have no idea who is plotting hostile seizure of me, but I'd like it to be the Bass Brothers. There has always been something appealing to me about the Bass Brothers. Maybe it's because the name — the Bass Brothers sounds like one of those cheery singing groups, like the Mills Brothers and the Andrews Sisters, who made life just a little bit better while the world was waiting for Elvis Presley, Milldewey says I can forget the Bass Brothers, though, as well as T. Boone Pickens, Saul Steinberg and Carl Icahn. All are too busy to fiddle around with the small-bore "leveraged-buyout potential" of my operation.

"Are you telling me, Milldewey, that a man who owns not only three magnificently thumbed editions of Marcel Proust's 'Remembrance of Things Past' but also the complete works of Art Buchwald bound in hard covers is not a rich enough prospect to lure the nation's leading depreciation artists?"

Yes, that apparently is the way it is. With entire TV networks up for takeover, not to mention the finest magazines, newspapers and publishing houses, the little fellow of the communications industry, the faithful toiler who has never missed delivering a column, no matter how crushed by illness, grief or hangover - such a man who has never stooped to paying for his vodka with food stamps or driving his Cadillac to pick up a welfare check - such a man is of no interest to the glamour boys of hostile take-

These sour reflections were chased by an inspired thought: Senator Jesse Helms!

In politics he is known simply as Republican of North Carolina, but rarely has there been a grosser piece of political understatement, for his true constituency is all of Absolutely Righteons America. "Could it be Jesse Helms behind this hostile takeover?" "Do you mean Senator Helms. Republican of Absolutely Righteous America?" Milldewey asked. 'Isn't Helms a little big to be interested in a Mom-and-Pop column operation like yours?" There it was again - the contempt one met from people without the slightest understanding of the power of the column. I had sensed it when Senator Helms, who should know better, called upon all citizens of Absolutely Righteous America to buy CBS stock so they could be Dan Rather's boss.

Don't mistake me. Dan Rather is a fine man, an admirable journalist and a great American, not to mention charming, gracious and witty. However -

I still resent Senator Helms's suggestion that Dan is a more important person for Absolutely Righteous America to boss around than I am. Sure I realize the senator wants a takeover of CBS so that Absolutely Righteous America can fire Dan, and - I'll admit it - I was furious about this evidence that Helms thinks Dan is more vital than I am in determining the destiny of the nation.

In my anger I may have said some things about Dan that I didn't mean. Things like, "I never denied Dan is an influential fellow but face it: Where does he get his ideas? From reading my column."

Very likely these words have got back to Senator Helms, who reasons that it's cheaper to squelch Dan by a takeover of me than of CBS. I guess I deserve it for talking too much. Still, I hate to think of my Proust and Buchwald collections being sold to pay off those bank finagiers.

Some Artists Bringing the Frame Into the Picture

"Modern pictures have made the very definite effort to leave the frame. But do they stay out, do they go back and if they do is that where they belong and has anybody been

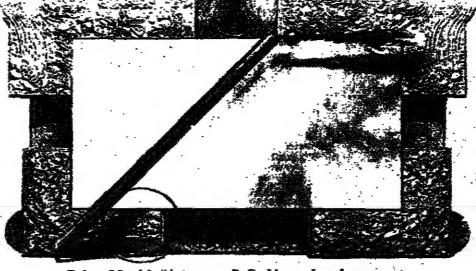

Gertrude Stein, "Lectures in America"

By Grace Glueck New York Times Service EW YORK - The picture frame, an endangered species for the past few decades, gives signs of creeping back, with the aid of artists.

For the 500 years or so since oil painting began, the frame has helped define the tricky boundary between art and life. At its peak it was an ornate, assertive piece of architecture that served more or less as a proscenium arch for "presentation" of the work. But it has been downgraded in the 20th century, pared to a sliver of itself by the impact of Modernism. As painting became more abstract, diminishing in illusionistic perspective, artists no longer needed the rigid, enclosing frame to lead the eye to the action within. They began to let the edges of the pictime define its boundaries vis-àvis the space of the real world. When Abstract Expressionism came in, with its flattened space, non-illusionistic imagery and large canvases, the frame was spurned as decorative. The picture, taking on the status of an object in its own right, became part of the viewer's arena. Since the 1950s, frames for paintings have been more or less vestigial. The Museum of Modern Art recently replaced many of the ornate frames on its 19th- and 20thcentury paintings with flat. narrow borders of antiqued gold.

True, many contemporary artists — mainly of figurative per-suasion — have tied in frames with their imagery, among them the West Coast "funk" paintersculptor Roy de Forest and members of the Chicago "imagist" school such as Jim Nutt, Art Green and Barbara Rossi. But now, with the general revival of interest in figurative and illusionistic painting, the frame seems to be regaining wider appeal. A number of artists, especially younger ones, have turned to the frame for its ability to enhance, expand, even establish a dialogue with the painted surface of the end of the 19th century when he stippled his frames "in opposite harmony" to the picture.

The season's boldest case in point was the show of enormous, outrageous baroque frames in elief by Robert Morris - at the Sonnabend and Leo Castelli galleries — that all but over-whelmed his paintings. Layering apocalyptic images of elongated hands, bones, fetuses, skulls in swirling sculptural patterns, the frames set up a play of movement with the vaporous, fire-and-brimstone imagery of flat pastels. whose colors and linear elements were swept into the frames' seething surfaces. Part sculpture, part painting, the objects came about, Morris said, because he wanted to see how his recent paintings would combine with elements of plaster reliefs.

Not many artists have gone as the concept of it is of interest to a wide spectrum of Realist painters and photographers. Its form ranges from the somber, bulky architectural creations of Neil Jenney to the kitschy beads and sequins that surround the deliberately tacky paintings of Rhonda Zwillinger. There are other manifestations in the work of such disparate artists as Ed McGowin, Brad Davis, Philip Pocock, Sam

Messer, Gwenn Thomas, Loren Munk, Will Mentor, Robert-Helm and Donald Roller Wilson.

Jenney has been framing his simple but monumental composi-tions since 1970, shortly after he gave up sculpture. His dark, elaborately architectural wooden frames employ such Jenney-in-vented devices as "mantel-lighting," in which a flat surface close to the image is toned in such a way as to enhance the illusion of light emanating from it. As in Morris's work, the image is often overpowered by the sculptural mass of the frame, which bears on it a boldly lettered title. And Jenney, like Morris, sees painting and frame as a totality whose parts reinforce one another.

While acknowledging the frame's importance in presenta-tion, Ed McGowin regards it more as an aid to "intensifying" his quietly painted but often men far as Morris, but the frame, or acing views of interiors and obiects: Since the late 1970s, he has been surrounding these views with heavy, dark frames of metal or vacuum-formed plastic in simplified "cookie-cutter" outlines of such everyday things as a chair, a car, an apple. In one of his more light-hearted examples, recently shown at the Gracic Mansion Gallery, a levitating birthday cake is bounded by the outline of a bunny. "I try to make the frame

'echo' the painting so it adds to the content," McGowin said. "In this case there's a connection between birthday cakes and the leg-endary fertility of rabbits. The lock between the frame and the image is more interesting than if I had painted each separately."

A similar "lock" between image and frame is noted in the satirical work of Donald Roller Wilson, recently shown at the Holly Solomon Gallery. These precisely painted visions of dogs in human garb are solemnized by heavy black "ancestral" frames in cut-out shapes or padded with fabric that resembles the material used for lining coffins.

Three younger artists in whose work the frame makes "dialogue" with the image are Sam Messer, Loren Munk and Will Mentor. Messer, who has worked as a frame-maker, paints composi-tions in which near-abstractions of such forms as skulls, fish and bodies are juxtaposed. Using paint or modeling paste to create flat and relief surfaces, he abstracts motifs from the work and deploys them around the wide, flat surface of his frame.

Mentor, whose crisp compositions deal with forms between abstraction and realism, has recently begun to adorn his paintings with old American frames, baroquely carved and patterned. Painting on boards cut to fit the frames, he finds that — at first unconsciously, now with awareness — he incorporates motifs from the moldings into the work. Now he is having frames made especially to fit his paintings.

Munk constructs his frames within the boundaries of the canvas, leaving the edges unfettered to give a double border effect. In two works from a series at the Gabrielle Bryers Gallery, he bounded gritty scenes of urban life with rococco swag "frames" composed of heavily impastoed gold paint and shiny mirror tiles applied directly to the canvas.

Theorizing about the frame's resurgence, Munk said, "Jackson Pollock introduced us to endless space, where the edge didn't mat-ter, But in the last 20 years we've found the world is finite; endless expansion is not a reality. Frames reflect our sense of boundaries." Flashy materials are also the specialty of Zwillinger, who sends up pop culture of the 1940s and 50s. Painting tacky images of Marilyn Monroe, muscle men. postcard scenery, she encloses them in old frames beavily garnished with beads, paillettes and Photographers are also branching out. In his recent exhibition at the Tim Greathouse Gallery. Philip Pocock showed composite impressions of Berlin, with heavy frames especially made for each picture. Barbed wire sprouted from one that encloses an image of a bombed Nazi transportation center and a shot of a soldier guarding a building in East Berlin was surrounded by a retable-type frame in 15th-century style that resembles a sentry box.

Another photographer, Gwenn Thomas, who is also a painter, inflects her camera images by framing them, then applying col-ors or motifs from them to the frame or extending the photo imagery by painting out over the frame. In this way, she feels, she creates a "solid object, a totality," and a bridge between photogra-phy and painting. In short, under artists' auspices, the frame in its many guises is having a small resurgence. Not a major comeback, mind you, but while not resolving Gertrude Stein's befuddlement — it's at least enough to give her question new relevance.

Hugh Helner, the publisher of Playboy magazine, claimed Monday that Peter Bogdanorich had an affair with the 13-year-old sister of Dorothy Stratten, a former Maymate of the Year and the movie director's former lover who was murdered in 1980 by her insband. Hefner, speaking to reporters and acquaintances of Stratter's at the Playboy mansion in Los Angeles, denied allegations in Bogdano vich's book, "The Killing of a Unicom," that the publisher led Stratten into a lifestyle that resulted in her death. Hefner, who had been sidential chief of St. feuding with the director before the book was published last August, contended that after the murder, Bogdanovich had pursued Stratten's entire family, including the "seduction" of her younger sister, Louise, now 16.
